The election for King Carnival to preside over the fall festival and Mardi Gras at Coney Island, Sept. 16 to 21, inned spiritedly and the coupon ballots cut from The Evening World opped into the ballot boxes prowided at a hundred different places on Coney Island. Besides these the malls brought stacks of ballots to the Mardi Gras editor at this office.

The first envelope opened was a sainty affair, addressed in a feminine hand. Three ballots dropped out, each bearing the name of John Econopouly, the bachelor confectioner, restaurateur and moving-picture man, of Econopouly Brothers. And there was a little note with the ballots. It said:

Likes "King John."

"I think King John would sound nice and so, as Mr. Econopouly is a friend of mine, I decided to vote for him. I got two friends to cut the ballot out The Evening World and vote for him for me and let me send the ballots. "ADMIRER."

Jolly's Friends Enthusiastic.

The count for the first day's balloting from, showed that the friends of Phil to win the crown for him if possible.

They began to vote early: they voted often, and they show a disposition to keep on voting: There were 106 votes east for Jolly, which made him the leader in the count.

Eighty-three ballots bore the name of John Econopouly, giving him second place.

Fernand Akoun came third, with to win the crown for him if possible. They began to vote early; they voted Akoun came third, with sixty-seven, but as his canvassers are sixty-seven, but as his canvassers are all on roller skates they will probably go more rapidly and bring him up in the list.

It has been decided to have a big automobile parade on one night of the carnival, in addition to the allegorical pageant of the Mardi Gras. Ex-King Herman I. who forsook the presidence.
